HEROES MARCH IN TRIUMPH

THE "SALLIES" WERE ON HAND, AS USUAL, WITH HOT DOUGHNUTS FOR THE DOUGHBOYS. HERE ARE TWO OF THEM

Gladys McIntyre, who won fame abroad, and Fred Trudeau of Lowell, a member of Company M of the 101st Regiment. Notice that Trudeau has has engaged the second doughnut.

The Salvation Army had its heroes abroad as well as its heroines. Here is one of them, Major L. Alison Coe, who came back as a member of General Edwards' staff.

Irene McIntyre, a sister of Gladys. The soldier is John Fresia of Lee. He is a Company M man, 101st Regiment. And Fresia has got the "hook" on, too.

BIG AND LITTLE EVENTS THAT AMUSED JOYOUS CROWDS

Snowflakes didn't keep a resident from the Cape section from wearing his straw hat. He was noticed at South Station with the Summer lid and when he met a policeman didn't hesitate to query for a place where he could secure a more suitable headpiece.

The statues in the Public Garden were hung with icicles today. Two suburbanites, he wearing a big coonskin coat and she only a new Spring sport suit, were observed making their way to the Commonwealth avenue stands about 10 o'clock. "Mercy," said she, "look at those icicles! I suppose I really ought to have worn my fur coat." "I told you so," said he, sententiously, thus reversing the usual order of things.

Six New England Governors were entertained at breakfast at the Somerset Club by General Francis Henry Appleton, retired, an old 1st Corps Cadet officer. This evening the other Governors will be the guests of Governor Milliken of Maine at the Touraine, and later at a theatre party.

Many Bostonians came to view the parade in Winter attire that would have stood them well in a polar expedition. Miss Spring was the most notable absentee in the whole parade but her loss was met by earlaps, fur caps, heavy woolen mittens, capes, and sweaters, overcoats, steamer rugs, Indian rugs, army blankets and cushions. But there was one thing that kept everybody warm and that was enthusiasm.

Just before the parade started Miss Dorothy Forbes, clad in a coat of horizon blue, drove three army officers in a whirlwind tour around the twenty-six Re dcross dressing stations for final inspection.

Women predominated in the Commonwealth avenue stands by a ratio of about 15 to 1. Mere man was almost swallowed up in the sea of femininity. There were young women, middle-aged dames and grandmothers and all of them were having a grand time.

Those sitting on the stands facing the South were fairly comfortable, but the women on the north side who did not wear fur coats, shivered as if suffering with palsy.

Several big auto trucks lined up in front of Symphony Hall with bands.

By 11 o'clock people were lined up three deep on both sides of Commonwealth avenue, while others sat and shivered on the stone steps of nearby residences. Some of these steps were roped off and others boarded off against the vast mobs which made for them.

* * *

At No. 415 Commonwealth avenue, where there is an extensive plot of green grass, the entire lawn was covered with elaborate platforms so people would not spoil the appearance of the lawn.

Wounded Drum and Drummer Are Right There in Line

Never in its lifetime has the big drum of the 101st Infantry Band had such a drumming as today. Second Class Musician Bert H. Davis said he would make the big old drum tell how glad the boys of the 101st Infantry were to get back to the old home town, and he did.

"Considerable drum," remarked Musician Davis. "She has seen as much service as any drum in the American Expeditionary Force."

"I'll say so," put in Albert A. Lombardi, clarinet player in the 101st Infantry Band. The day the "old drum" was hit at Chateau-Thierry Drummer Davis got hit on the right leg. Then William Madden of Brookline came up as "replacement drummer," a position he held for six weeks while Davis was in the hospital.

VETERANS OF WORLD WAR ARE LED BY OLD COMMANDER

The heart of Boston rose to its lips at exactly one o'clock today when the beloved Major-General Clarence R. Edwards, mounted on a sorrel charger, turned the corner of Beacon and Charles streets and started the "Welcome Home" parade of the Yankee Division.

A million spectators cheered.

The spectators, massed in living walls along the route, had been quiet. Silence deepened as the "zero hour" approached.

Suddenly Major-General Edwards, the beloved "Old Man" of the "Y. D." and its commander through most of its battling in France, rode out from Arlington street into the middle of Beacon street. Behind him was his mounted staff.

Then what a cheer went up. It was as though General Edwards, by his mere appearance, had touched a spring which released the pent-up enthusiasm of the spectators. Their voices rose in one wild roar of welcome.

FLAKES SWOOP OVER HEROES.

At the same time two aeroplanes, suddenly swooped over the Common from the direction of the harbor. They flew low, so low that the drone of their engines could be heard plainly.

One of the planes was guided by its pilot over the very middle of Beacon street. When General Edwards was starting the parade this seaplane was skimming along almost directly overhead.

The progress of the parade of 20,000 heroes was marked by the cheering which ran along the double line of spectators throughout the five and one-half-mile route.

At 1:25 General Edwards arrived in front of the Hotel Westminster at No. 62 Commonwealth avenue, on the north side of that thoroughfare.

Mrs. Edwards was on a stand in front of the house. Over her flew her husband's official banner, the flag of a major-general in the United States Army.

General Edwards halted the parade. He waved his hand toward his wife. She waved back. Spectators within range gave extra cheers for Mrs. Edwards. Then the parade moved on its triumphant way.

It was the greatest parade Boston ever knew, and it was seen by one of the greatest and most joyous gatherings ever assembled in the city. The spectators were the "home folks" from all six New England States. The States from which the Yankee Division was drawn.

The marching soldiers, from commanders down to "doughboys," had come forth from our hearths and homes. They had done wondrous things in battle. They had proved themselves literally a champion National Guard division of the entire American Expeditionary Forces. They returned covered with glory and decorations.

The appearance of the soldiers, as the parade went briskly along, brought the final outburst of emotions which had been steadily gathering all over New England to be released in Boston today.

These emotions were the highest and best. There was the triumphant pride in the military deeds made necessary by the world crisis of the war. There was family and community exultation in the glory of individual heroes and of whole units.

More than all there was the sheer joy of welcoming back the men and youths who had risked all in humanity's cause.

WOUNDED MEN IN AUTOS.

The parade brought home to the spectators the risk their soldiers had run. Among the 20,000 in the line were wounded men borne in automobiles.

Representing the sacrifice of life itself was the gold star in the number. Like for the overseas dead of the division.

Thus, in the midst of the wild acclaim was the lesson which was borne upon the minds of all, the pride which New England had paid toward maintaining world freedom.

Long before the parade started the city and its extra parade day population had taken positions along the line of march. So elaborate were the preparations that three and one-half miles of grandstands had been built for officials, for relatives of soldiers, for war workers and for private organizations.

FUR COATS POPULAR.

That the greatest crowd in the history of Boston was to gather in the centre of the city was evident as early as 10 a. m., when Tremont street, from Boylston to Park, filled. Church was lined with people ten deep. The same was true of Park street. Fur coats were much in evidence everywhere, and their owners were envied by the less fortunate, who shivered in the chill blasts from the northwest.

Thousands of peddlers were in and around the centre of the city doing a handoffice business selling Y.D. buttons, flags, pennants, noise-makers, etc. Many ex-service men in uniform were among the venders. The crowds purchased from the soldiers and sailors in preference to the other itinerant merchants.

Vehicular traffic had a difficult time getting through. It ceased at the junction of Tremont and Winter streets as early as 9:30 a. m. It required the efforts of four policemen at this point to keep a space sufficiently clear for automobile passage.

Eight thousand men of the "Y. D." were down from Camp Devens to Boston in the morning hours, following the units which had arrived yesterday. With military promptness these units moved from their billeting points today to the scene of parade formations.

At the State House was the first review, when the division marched by Governor Calvin Coolidge of this State, the Governors of the other New England States, Assistant Secretary of War Benedict Crowell, representing the War Department, and officials prominent in the public life of New England.

LIKE FOUR LINES OF A FAN.

Starting at the Tremont and Boylston street sides of Boston Common the parade turned into Arlington street, and swung out the north side of Commonwealth avenue.

From the time it struck Commonwealth avenue the parade route might be compared to four lines of a narrow fan, two out and two back. Straight out the broad avenue they went to Charlesgate East, then doubled back down Commonwealth avenue. Among the 20,000 in the line were wounded men borne in automobiles. There the parade route called for a cut-over through Berkeley to Boylston street, and out Boylston to Massachusetts avenue, thence by a longer cut-over on Massachusetts avenue to Columbus avenue. The rest was a straight stretch down Columbus Avenue to Park square for dismissal.

Everything was given over to the parade day. It was a school and business holiday. Special traffic regulations were made. Even the United States mail which claims right of way about everywhere and anywhere, was not allowed to break through the parade lines.

The city was decorated as though to rival the military decorations which the Yankee Division has won in such splendid numbers.

The "Y. D." emblem was universal. Hundreds of thousands of flags were flown. Miles of bunting were used. The parade route especially was a riot of patriotic color. The very grandstands had their timbered structures camouflaged under flags and bunting so that they added to the decorative effective.

To the immediate relatives of the soldiers on parade the day brought richest meeting. Thousands of fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers and sweethearts travelled miles and put up in a badly crowded city overnight for the precious privilege of seeing their loved ones in the parade line.

The pride of these relatives knew no bounds. Fathers and mothers held their heads high if they could say to envying audiences: "My boy marches today."

Early in the day the population of the city grew as new thousands poured in from the Metropolitan District and points within morning reach.

The glory of the Yankee Division, of its officers and its men, was the common theme.

RECOUNTERIES OF HEROISM.

Stories were told and retold of individual deeds of prowess, all going to make up the mosaic of gallantry which adorns the Yankee Division shield.

While the public was gathering there was great activity among those in charge of parade arrangements and its infinite details.

The policing of the route was in itself a mighty task. Eight thousand Military Police, 1,000 men from the navy and 1,500 men of the Boston Police Department combined to handle the crowds and keep lanes of passage open.

Members of the parade committee and its various sub-committees were at high pressure pitch. The item of commissary alone for the men on parade and for the military and civilian police was a tremendous one. The hospitality sub-committee of the Parade Day Committee was busy from early morning, attending to needs of visiting relatives of soldiers seeking housing or hotel accommodations.

Magrane Houston Canteen Feeds Over 5,000 Service Men

One hundred and fifty girls, working in three shifts, served food to service men today at the Magrane Houston canteen, corner of Charles and Beacon streets. The firm provided refreshments for 5,000 men, and at an early hour had already served 1,000. All the food was home cooked and included pies, puddings, sandwiches and hot coffee. The canteen was opened at 4 a. m. and the first man to present himself was from Los Angeles, a member of the 181st Engineers. The canteen was in charge of J. J. Bates of the managerial staff of the firm and the committee included Miss G. E. Traynor, chairman; C. E. Restall, P. E. Holland, J. F. Thornton, M. E. Hoey, M. E. Lyons, A. E. Leary, J. N. VILLA IN BATTLE TO HOLD CITY OF PARRAL

Juarez, Mex., April 25.—Francisco Villa, at the head of 1,500 troops, is believed to be engaged in battle with Federal troops for the possession of Parral today. Mining men who arrived here from Parral say Villa entered that city Sunday following a skirmish with the small garrison stationed there.

Gen. Edwards' Last Orders to His Old Command

Following is Major-General Clarence R. Edwards' "last word" to his soldiers, which was read to them before they started on their triumphant march through the streets of Boston:

"Men of the Y. D., show to the people today the steady-road discipline that was yours in France; keep in step, with heads up and eyes on the sky, rather than on the street; march at strict attention, with eyes left, past the Governors at the State House, and eyes right, a tribute to the Mayor of the city that has given us this glorious welcome; let your eyes and faces express your pleasure and the tribute to your people that should be theirs, for it is a joyous occasion, and nothing but gladness, with self-restraint, should be yours. Keep closed-up and in step to show the public there are no stragglers in the 26th Division; a man falls out only because he falls from physical exhaustion, and the Y. D. doesn't get exhausted.

"You may recognize your friends and return their greetings, but still be soldiers as you were in France."

CROWDS SURGE, FLAGS FLASH EVERYWHERE

Fathers, Mothers, Sons, Fakirs, Loan Boosters, Everybody Out for Great Parade

Flags, gay, giddy, inspiriting!

Women laughing, dressed in their very best.

Men and boys and soldiers and sailors—soldiers everywhere.

Aunt Jane from up State, and lily the mother from a farmhouse down in Maine;

Liberty Loan boosters and fakirs predominant.

Oh, folks, the Y. D. is marching today!

Start up Tremont street, under imposing panoply of flags. "Here's your Y. D. button," urges the swarthy faced fakir, in the blue trousers and army coat, the olive drab; "here's your Y. D. button. Only a few of them left."

And the fakir, mildly, unsnacked a satchel of other Y. D. buttons, the "only few" of them left, while down the sidewalk, at his feet, are other satchels, with "Y. D." on them. Those Y. D. badges—they are like the widow's cruse and flour, never failing.

But the flags! Flags of the allies, flags of curious little out of the way places, flags of which the name of those who have stirred up the dust about self-determination in their little out of the way hamlets, you make up your mind. Then right ahead flag of Patagonia. At least it looked like Patagonia. A child on Tremont street, craning its little neck, read of the sign.

"What is Patagonia, and why does it have a flag," shrilled the youngster in his piping voice, "why—why—why—mother?"

THE SURGING CROWDS.

"Ah," said mother, very disturbed, "they—we—never had that in the books when I studied geography."

And the crowds surged, this parade day, as eagerly those with the coveted tickets made their way to the reserved seats. "Oh, will you look at the big clothes line, all down Tremont street," cried a little girl, clinging to his father's coat. "Look, daddy!"

"Yes, yes," said daddy, "but watch your step, my son, and keep hold of that basket of lunch."

"Soldiers don't have to bother about their lunch," came back the answer. "See! Here's U. S. C. A. refreshment automobiles. That's what the sign reads, father, all for the soldiers. And they have coffee—gee, I wish I could drink coffee, and sandwiches and gum—why don't you be nice for a little boy to chew gum?—and, oh, say, dad, I wish I was a Y. D. soldier."

And the crowd still surged, good-natured, eagerly insistent for that reserved seat or that place on the sidewalk marked out by inspecting fates a day beforehand. And the fakirs pressed about, still about. With here and there a soldier. A soldier held up little red, white and blue flags, with small guns hung to them made of wood. Again those flags were attached to bells which rang.

AND THE SMALL BOY.

"Oh, I want a bell; I want a flag; I want a gun with a Y. D. initial."

Was ever indulgent father, vainly trying to a great crowd for reach a prayed for objective, so beset with things for sale and children who would not be denied?

Down the street passed a soldier, not sick enough to be in hospital; not strong enough to march. "He—he's got a wooden leg," the child at his father's side cried out, "oh, father, I can tell it by the way he walks. Father, father, even if I had a wooden leg, I would like to be a soldier."

A hush fell all about. And then the soldier with the stiff walk and the ruddy face, undaunted, stood at attention and saluted a little boy, smiling. The tension was relieved. Y. D. men are good sports, making the best of things, even in affliction. And small matters of wooden legs, bravely letting a man walk out and about on Y. D. Day, do not worry the spirits of the men who made history at Chateau Thierry and Belleau Wood.

WHISTLING AND SINGING.

Whistling, hurrying, singing, hustling, the crowd billowed out under great banners where in places were written names never forgotten by the men who have just come from there. "Argonne Wood," "St. Mihiel," "Boulecourt," "Colonel Logan," read the names.

"The soldiers are coming," cried children and mothers as well.

"Here's your Y. D. button, last chance before the parade begins," piped a hundred husky throats.

And overhead the flags waved, while, just down the street the first band blared forth its welcome.

Y. D. Day! The day of the 26th! And nobody blamed the little boy, but echoed, even as he, in their hearts:

"Tramp, tramp, tramp, here they come! Gee, father, I want to be a soldier!"

Major Abbott and Major Knox both saw active service in France and are the highest field officers which New Hampshire had in the war.

GRANITE STATE CHEERS.

On Commonwealth avenue, in the vicinity of Exeter street, Governor Coolidge gave to Governor Bartlett a section for New Hampshire alone, which was decorated, bearing the sign, "Welcome Home, New Hampshire Boys." About 5,000 people from the Granite State sat here and cheered themselves hoarse.

This section was under the direction of Governor Bartlett's committee, consisting of E. T. Buckingham, president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, Mayor Hislop of Portsmouth, Mayor Verrette of Manchester, Mayor Crowley of Nashua, Mayor Watson of Keene, Mayor Smalley of Dover, Mayor French of Concord, Mayor Leach of Franklin, Mayor Brown of Somersworth, Mayor Young of Rochester, Bernard Carey of Newport, Mayor Rowe of Laconia and Herbert Bartlett of Claremont.

Governor Bartlett said: "New Hampshire greatly appreciates the hospitality of Boston and of Massachusetts. Both Mayor Peters and Governor Coolidge have earned the profound gratitude of all our people."

EVERYBODY PROVIDED FOR.

Governor Milliken said at noon that every bona fide citizen of Maine who came to Boston for the purpose of seeing the parade was given a ticket. Out of the tickets assigned to him by the official committee in charge of the tickets his orders were that tickets should first be given to relatives of Y. D. men whose applications for tickets miscarried. Out of the remainder other members of the public were cared for to the extent of their applications, and a few tickets were turned back to the general committee this morning.

Railroad Terminals Crowded Early With Incoming Thousands

The people of the cities and towns north of Boston began crowding the Boston railroad trains early today, and by 9 a. m. there was a steady stream of people pouring into the city through the North Station. It was distinctly a holiday crowd, to distinction from the usual crowds of commuters coming into the city on these trains. Nearly every one carried lunch boxes and baskets and many carried camp chairs.

In Salem, Lynn and many other cities all work ceased today, the stores, banks and other places of business locked their doors and these cities, deserted by a great part of their populations, took on a more deserted look than they usually have on legal holidays.

The North Station was crowded during the early forenoon with persons who had made appointments to meet friends coming in from the suburbs and with suburbanites waiting for city friends to guide them. So dense was the crowd in the station at times that it was difficult to get through the waiting rooms from the trainshed to the street, and the few who were leaving the city on outward bound trains had to buffet their way in the direction of the train shed through massed streams of people coming in.

Veteran station employes declared that the crowds coming into the city today were the largest in the history of the North station.

Every man, woman and child in southern and western Massachusetts and southern New England seemingly passed through the South Station on their way to see the parade.

From early morning down to the start of the parade the station was jammed with continuous streams of people, carrying all sorts of welcoming banners and bedecked with ribbons and badges.

The New Haven was taxed to the limit of its capacity to handle the record-breaking throngs and 112 special trains in addition to the regular schedule were running from all points of the system with the regularity of clock work.

Four specials from Providence, two from New Haven, one from Bridgeport, one from Waterbury and one from New Bedford, were loaded to the gates, and the Boston & Albany there came extra trains from Framingham, Worcester and Springfield.

They were happy crowds, mostly in family groups. Adding to the congestion were the hundreds of friends gathered in the station to meet them. But there was no lingering around the station, for the visitors were intent on losing no time in getting to the route of the parade, which soon began. Summer street, by the office of the Boston American, was a veritable parade in itself, as the crowds in a never-ceasing line poured upward in the general direction of the Common.

'Mexico Must Obey Monroe Edict,' Says Borah

Washington, April 25.—The United States will enforce the Monroe Doctrine in the case of Mexico regardless of whether or not the Mexican government recognizes this American policy.

This was the emphatic declaration of Senator Borah of Idaho, when asked for his views on the announcement of Mexican Acting Secretary of Foreign Affairs that his government does not acknowledge the Monroe Doctrine. Senator Borah said:

"It is not necessary that Mexico recognize the Monroe Doctrine in order that the Monroe Doctrine may operate. The Monroe Doctrine is a personal policy of the United States, and the United States will enforce it, regardless of whether of not it is recognized by Mexico.

"We enforce the Monroe Doctrine for our own protection, and not at the convenience or pleasure of some one else."

SOME OF THE EARLIEST OF THE EARLY BIRDS WHO GOT FREE SEATS FOR THE REVIEW OF NEW ENGLAND'S HEROES

Two views of the crowd at the Public Library, which offered ideal accommodations for watching the parade. Many of these peple were on hand soon after daybreak, and came prepared for the frigid blasts that came out of the Northeast.

Ready to wave their welcome to the heroes as they go by on Commonwealth Avenue. The broad top of a stone fence in front of a residence provides the "Seats."

OVERSEAS Y. D. BOYS SAD TODAY

Gloom Prevails Among Lads Who Would Share Comrades' Honors at Home

While thousands of Yankee Division boys in shining equipment and with smiling faces received the plaudits of their welcoming homefolk today, other boys of the Yankee Division in France were sad as they brooded over the fact that they were not present to share in the celebration.

They are the boys who belonged to the Yankee Division originally and whose hearts belong to it no matter who became separated from it through one of the many vicissitudes of war.

Many of them have tried, and all have wanted, to get back to their own division, without avail.

All or many have read of the welcome their comrades received in the [illegible] and, to them have [illegible] signs and muttered gloomily, because they, too, could not be present to share in the honors.

MANY LOYAL TO DIV. HOSTS.

Some of these men were wounded and in hospitals [illegible] joined to other divisions because of their fitness for special work.

At General Headquarters there are at least fifty former Y. D. men whose hearts are turning longingly to Boston and to Massachusetts today—as their imagination paints the picture of their comrades, marching through the brilliantly decorated streets and avenues.

Among the former YD men who are today stationed at General Headquarters in France is Corporal H. L. McQuinn, formerly of the 101st Machine Gun Company, whose home is at No. 195 Beach street.

Corporal McQuinn wears three wound stripes, souvenirs of the fighting at Chemin des Dames sector, at Ferey Woods and at Chateau Thierry.

OTHER MEMBERS TRANSFERRED.

At one time Corporal McQuinn was rendered deaf, dumb and blind by his injuries, for fifteen days, and recovered, but of late he has been on duty at headquarters.

Private Herbert L. Hildreth, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Ruthven of No. 92 Eutaw street, East Boston, is another of the original members of the Yankee Division.

He was a member of the 11th Company, Massachusetts C. A. C., before the forming of the 101st Ammunition Train, with which he served in France.

Private Sydney D. Bryant, whose father is E. H. Bryant of No. 83 Chandler street, was eighteen when he enlisted with the 101st Ammunition Train. He was transferred to the General Headquarters on January 15, 1919.

Another is Corporal George F. X. Winterbottom, a former member of C Company, 101st Field Signal Battalion, who was with the 26th Division through all its operations at the front. He was transferred to the headquarters on January 15, 1919, where he is today.

SAY BOSTON WOMAN HAS TWO HUSBANDS

Worcester, April 25—Jean Frances Shanley of Batavia street, Boston, will have a chance to explain to the grand jury why one husband wasn't enough for her. She was arrested on a warrant sworn out by Private Edward Shea, G Company, 101st Infantry, who married her in 1914.

Shea claimed that he learned his wife had a husband living when she married him. The woman is alleged to have returned to the first husband after Shea was called to war.

Colonel Logan, Through the American, Thanks All Loyal Friends

Colonel Edward L. Logan, commanding officer of the 101st Infantry, Yankee Division, told the Boston American today:

"This day marks the final appearance as a military unit of the 101st Infantry in the service of the United States. With many of us it marks a service of over two years of great activity in which every officer and every enlisted man gave every bit of energy and every bit of intelligence that he had in the cause of the United States.

"Over 2,200 of our men have appeared in this parade and we are happy in the thought that we have been joined by some of the former officers and men who rendered conspicuous service and had come home by reason of being wounded on the other side of the ocean. We are all happy that so many of us have been gathered together on this great occasion.

"I know I speak the heart and sentiment of every officer and every enlisted man in the organization when I say that the plaudits which we have received have only made us conscious of the fact that the great heroes of our regiment are, after all, those who made the supreme sacrifice on the other side of the ocean. I want to renew again my thanks to the people of Boston and of Massachusetts for the wonderful support they gave to the officers and enlisted men of the 101st Infantry during all of its service and to say to the people through the Boston American that every officer and every enlisted man of the 101st Infantry is deeply appreciative of the generous support and the unflagging loyalty shown to every man of the organization while we were fighting during the war over in France.

"To the Boston American I am deeply grateful for its whole-hearted support of me and the officers and men of the 101st Infantry. To the American and through the American I offer my thanks again to my friends who have stood so loyally by me."

2-PLATOON BILL FOR FIREMEN IS SIGNED

Governor Coolidge today signed the firemen's two platoon bill, despite the opposition of Mayor Peters and officials of other Massachusetts cities, who opposed it on the grounds of economy and who personally petitioned the Governor to veto it.

The bill provides that whenever 10 per cent of the voters of any municipality in the State petition for a referendum on the two platoon act the question shall go on the ballot in that city or town for the next State election.

If the vote is in the affirmative the firemen shall then be divided into day and night shifts.

The bill has been introduced in the Legislature year after year for the past decade. Its friends managed to get it passed by both branches this year, and its enemies have sought without success to have it vetoed. Friends of Governor Coolidge said today that he signed it because it was a "home rule" measure and left the final action to those who will have to pay the bills.

NANETTE, 'GIRL' VETERAN, IN 101ST LINE

When the 101st Infantry passed by today, did you notice Nanette? Nanette is the only female soldier in the famous fighting force known as Boston's own."

Nanette is a she-goat, long-horned, with jet black hair. Miss Sergeant Howard Goodwin of L Company, 101st Infantry, found her, or rather found her mother, at St. Nazaire. That was ten months ago, when Nanette came into the world and the ranks of the 101st Infantry at the same time.

"She's a perfect lady," said Miss Sergeant Goodwin to an American reporter in the East Armory in East Newton street, and just at that moment Nanette leaped over a row of soldiers' cots, mounted the gallery at one end of the armory and showed a disposition to ignore the bugler's reveille which notified the boys of the 101st that the time for parade had come.

"Well, she has her faults," said the mess sergeant, "but she has her good qualities, too. We met her mother at St. Nazaire, and shortly after Nanette was born the mother fell into a dugout and broke her back. We had to shoot her, she suffered so much.

"I'm going to take Nanette home with me to No. 187 Grand avenue, Medford, but Nanette is a real soldier's girl, and I'm afraid I'll lose her affection when I put on the civies."

The streets and sidewalks along the line of march in the South End were easy to fill up this forenoon. While the people were pouring into the streets the Back Bay from early morning it was nearly noon before the Columbus avenue stands of the First Corps of Cadets, the Cadets' Relief Association and the Work Girls' Relief Association were filled. The few forehanded folks who came into the stands early sat all forenoon bundled in furs, blankets, rugs and other heavy wrappings.

More than four regiments of the Massachusetts State Guard, totalling about 2,500 men, were on special patrol duty along the route of the parade. Three companies were ranged about the State House. The State Guard also maintained a first aid service, with twenty-six stations and twenty-six motor ambulances. The officer in command of the outfit was Major George W. Morse. In and around the State House, forty members of the State Police in uniform and a squad of plain clothes men moved amid the crowd. Chief John H. Wright and Deputy Chief George C. O'Neil were in command. Captain Fitzgerald of station 2 was in charge of about 100 patrolmen stationed on Beacon, between Charles and Park streets.

At least 10,000 persons viewed the parade from the State House Building and grounds. Three stands for the Governor and his guests on the front lawn, held 2,000; stand for the Legislature and guests, 1,600; the Governor's reviewing stand, 500; the long stairs, 2,000; besides other stands and the windows, which were crowded. The long balcony at the front of the State House was divided between the Senate and the Governor's Council, with their guests.

If only they hadn't tried to top the scale of music when "The Star-Spangled Banner" was written it wouldn't be so many husky throats.

Many fathers and grandfathers from "Way Back East," who came to see their boys, brought with them the styles of the days of yore.

Various bugle calls resounded through the Cadet Armory Columbus avenue before the parade started as the buglers tried out their lungs. A sailor doing patrol duty outside shivered as an extra heavy blast from the northwest struck his spine. He was without an overcoat. "Believe me, I wish they'd blow 'hammocks,' said the gob as he increased his pace to keep warm.

"Sallies" made a big hit on Columbus avenue by distributing doughnuts, bar chocolate and peanuts to soldiers, sailors and police on duty in that section. Three trucks heaped high with food loaned by Salvation Army men and women passed up and down the avenue, making frequent stops to feed the men working in that area.

Wearing her military citation for distinguished service under fire, Mrs. Louise W. Fleming of Wollaston was conspicuous among the twenty of the "See-saw-seven V" workers attached to the 26th Division in France, who were in the line of the parade. Mrs. Fleming marched with the 101st Sanitary Train. Other "Y" women of the 26th marched were Miss Alice Carey and Mrs. Haring. Dr. C. H. Hesselgrave of Manchester, N. H., 26th Divisional surgeon, to whom General Hale extended the invitation to the "Y" workers to march in line with his favorite outfit, the 101st Machine Gun Battalion.

All the "Y" workers carried full marching equipment. Observed in the line were T. H. Lathrop of Branford, Ct., with the 3d Battalion, 104th Infantry, recommended for a Distinguished Service Cross for work under fire at Chateau Thierry; "Sunny Jim" Toulon, with the 101st Sanitary Train; H. F. Smith of West Medford, wounded at Verdun, with his 2d Battalion, 101st Infantry, and M. F. Allbright of Allston and D. F. Hoagland of Hyde Park, who were with the 101st Ammunition Train and 103d Heavy Artillery.

The naval grandstand at Charles and Boylston streets was gaily decorated with naval signal flags by Chief Quartermaster C. H. Squires, known as "Stormy" Squires. "Stormy" go this nickname at the noon informal dances held at the armory, of which he is in charge. A band from the naval training station at Hingham and a group of songsters entertained the naval crowd.

Two hundred wounded soldiers viewed the parade from the Red Cross stand on Commonwealth avenue between Charlesgate East and Charlesgate West. The stand contained more than 4,000 Red Cross delegates from all over New England. The organization took care of the wounded boys, conveying them to and from the hospitals.

A Red Cross tent was stationed on the State House grounds, near the Hooker Monument, in charge of Mrs. Dorothy Chamberlain of Winthrop, Mrs. Sallie A. Mark of Wollaston and Miss Mary K. Dunforth of Dedham.

Some conflict in orders caused a little feeling at Charles and Boylston streets, where the naval grandstand was located. Ensign H. H. Edgarton and forty men from the receiving ship were detailed to patrol the front of the stand. A company of Home Guardsmen also took up its position on the scene, and its leader, Captain Kinrald, was questioned by Miss Mae Hurley, chief yeowoman in charge of the stand. The company immediately left, and was succeeded by another, which caused some resentment on the part of the navy contingent.

Falling glass from a windowpane kicked out of a third-story window caused a flurry at the corner of Boylston and Charles streets. Albert Silva, who declined to give his address, was slightly cut and was treated at the emergency tent of Massachusetts Hospital Unit No. 1. Silva, after being treated, went back to his position to wait for the parade.

A 497-pound side show in the person of Herbert C. Penny, member of the Fat Men's Club, entertained the crowd in the vicinity of Columbus avenue and Casenove street and helped them forget the North Pole winds that blew along the avenue. Penny was "all dollie up" in hilarious fashion. A Prince Albert coat was topped with a silk tile. Three or four carnations and a dozen service badges decorated his manly chest. A specially made cigar fourteen inches long helped keep him warm. It was almost as thick as a man's arm.

When Colonel Logan and his staff appeared at Dartmouth street and Columbus avenue, on their way to the starting point of the parade, they were accorded a great reception by the assembled thousands.

"This reminds us of regular trench weather," said a number of the boys of the 101st, as they clapped their hands and jumped about, during a halt on the way to the starting point, in an effort to keep warm.

"You wouldn't do in the trenches, with those things," laughed the boys to a man who appeared elevated on a pair of stilts on Columbus avenue. "You'd better get back where it's safer."

At Massachusetts and Columbus avenues, many of the girls who had secured desirable standing spaces found the wind a little too raw for genuine comfort. They were resourceful, however, for they remedied this condition of affairs to some extent, by sitting on the edge of the sidewalks, and by wrapping themselves in newspapers. They were all cheerful.

In many of the stores in the section, stands had been built. One provisioner announced, "We're selling heat at $5 a portion." Many of the persons patronized the places, rather than brave the chilling winds, and as a result buy few seats were left vacant. Windows on the second floors, or on corners, especially of the bay type, appeared to be in popular demand.

Signs bearing the words: "Thank You," were extremely conspicuous on Commonwealth avenue. There was considerable reflection as to their significance. This was explained by a jovial gentleman who had begun his celebrating early and who said that the signs were offering thanks to the boys of the Yankee Division for beating the Germans.

A little old woman was seated in the topmost row of seats in Section C grandstand, Commonwealth avenue and Clarendon street. She spoke to her next seat neighbor. The story soon spread and in a few minutes she was given a seat in the front row. The little old lady, Mrs. Frank Knowles of Bellows Falls, Vt., had a grandson in the 26th. She didn't know what outfit he was with, but she hoped to pick him out of the 20,000 passing men.

Women of wealth and refinement perched themselves on the steps of Commonwealth avenue houses as early as 9 o'clock. There they remained despite all efforts to dispossess them. One lady, said to be the wife of a State Senator, was asked by a maid to leave her place on the steps of a house between Hereford street and Massachusetts avenue, on Commonwealth. She indignantly refused to move.

It was necessary to have a pass in order to enter the Somerset and other hotels in the vicinity. Unless a person was possessed of a "Guests'" pass, issued by the hotels, or a newspaperman's pass, he or she was not permitted to enter.

* * *

At 12:15 the stands on Commonwealth avenue burst into applause when the sun showed his face for the first time. At 12:30 singing was begun under the direction of War Camp Community leaders.

Residents of Newbury, Beacon and nearby streets, opened their doors to the men of the Yankee Division, in order that they might havte shelter in which to eat the sandwiches and drink the coffee furnished them by the Y. M. C. A. The men were appreciative, as they were thoroughly chilled, standing without overcoats, while waiting for the parade to begin.

The policemen guarding the lines of march were much relieved when the patrol from Division 11 rolled along, laden with sandwiches and coffee. It was necessary for the patrol to make several trips to satisfy the officers, who had been standing in the cold since early morning.

Many of the people who secured places on the sidewalks of Beacon street brought camp chairs with them. Others paid as much as $2 each for woode nboxes.

A tremendous burst of applause went up when about 100 G. A. R. men marched up Beacon street, to take their places in line, carrying American and post flags.

Police Commissioner Curtis and Superintendent Crowley made a trip over the route before the parade and looked over the police arrangements.

At Commonwealth avenue and Charlesgate West, where the 101st Infantry and the American Red Cross grandstands were located, firemen had lines of hose laid from hydrants to the grandstands, in order to be prepared for any fire emergency that might arise.

About 500 soldiers from Camp Devens General Base Hospital No. 16, and the West Roxbury Branch Base Hospital, wounded men from overseas, were brought by automobile by the Red Cross. In charge was Mrs. Henry P. King. The organization was assisted by about 160 canteen workers from Boston, Burlington, Vt., and White River Junction, Vt. They were kept busy distributing hot coffee and luncheon to the wounded soldiers. They gave out 580 gallons of hot coffee, and about 1,000 box luncheon, which included sandwiches, pies and cigarettes.

The Salvation Army proved just as popular here with the men as abroad during the fighting period. Equipped with eight wagons, the Army distributed about 50,000 doughnuts, under Colonel Adam Gifford and Lieutenant Colonel Joseph Atkinson. Besides the doughnuts they also distributed about 25,000 bars of chocolate.

When Mrs. Brigadier Mary Shepard, of the Salvation Army who was overseas with the YD appeared, many of the men recognized her, and cheered her over and over again.

The first accident of the day took place shortly after noon, when John Marshfield, a messenger boy, No. 132 Broadway, Charlestown, fell from a tree at the corner of Boylston and Tremont streets. He was treated at the Red Cross station on the Common for a sprained ankle and wrist and was sent home.

The tremendous throng which surged into Boston today was more than the Elevated could handle, although preparations had been made to take care of a record crowd. At Park street when Huntington avenue car 7093 arrived in the station there was a rush which broke the doors and shattered panes of glass. Women, some with children in their arms, were buffeted about.

Three small boys who managed to climb to the sloping roof of Horticultural Hall about noon gave the crowd nearby and the police a scare when they did a war dance. They ignored all orders from the police to come down, and officers were finally obliged to climb up after them.

* * *

An interesting spectacle on the line of march was the Shepard Rifle Club, which was observed in a balcony extending the entire length of the Shepard stores at Tremont and Winter streets. Over the heads of the women of this company was a large banner, which read: "You are Welcomed Home by the Shepard Rifle Club, who have worked for you—prayed for you—while you were away." The Shepard Rifle Club was the first uniformed women's military organization in the United States having regulation army equipment and regularly drilled in military tactics. Mrs. Georgia Driscoll is captain, Miss Josephine Goss, first lieutenant, and Miss Josephine Frazier, second lieutenant.

The band at the Elks' reviewing stand, consisting entirely of members of the organization, helped the crowd while away the time by playing war songs. Thomas E. Clifford led the crowd in singing.

The arrival of the Y. M. C. A. wagons on the Common with hot coffee and box lunches was the signal for the 101st Field Engineers to get rid of a great outburst of cheers. The association was working in conjunction with the Army and Navy Canteen.

"This looks like the battlefront, all right," cried a delighted boy in uniform as he secured his two doughnuts and hot coffee from a "Sally" lassie near Massachusetts and Columbus avenues.

On side streets leading into Columbus and Massachusetts avenues were a large number of auto trucks in which family parties from out of town came in to view the parade. These trucks contained benches and made fairly good reviewing stands.

Four hundred women from Hartford, Ct., occupied a portion of Section B grandstand on the south side of Commonwealth avenue between Berkeley and Clarendon streets. The boys in the 102d Infantry were the ones that interested them most. They were ready to "whoop'er up" when the Connecticut boys hove in sight.

Many of the plank bleachers were of an unstable nature. On several were signs posted by the building commissioner, H. A. Wilson: "Notice is hereby given that the structure to which this notice is affixed is adjudged to be unfit for observation purposes."

At each traffic exit there was a Red Cross tent fully equipped with a blanket cot and nurses in attendance.

Thousands of boxes, containing a sandwich, a generous slice of cake, a red apple and a package of gum, were distributed among the soldiers waiting at their various rendezvous for the parade to start, by Y. M. C. A. workers. A woman on Marlboro street, seeing the boxes, said to a companion: "I'm just dying for one of those." "Take mine, madam," said a big doughboy. "Good heavens, boy, I wouldn't think of it," exclaimed the lady. A second soldier said: "Take it, madam, take it. This guy has just come out of Dr. B. H. Nichols' house, where he ate so much that he couldn't swallow the last mouthful."

At 12:45 members of the G. A. R. marched to their stand at the corner of Commonwealth and Massachusetts avenues. They were led by Payson Bradley, a former department commander.

When Your House Caught Fire

And disaster seemed imminent.

When the flames reached higher and higher.

In those tense moments you did not count material loss.

Your concern was for the safety of those dear to you.

Only let their lives be spared and your gratitude would know no bounds.

For four years a world wide conflagration raged with such intensity that it threatened to consume civilization itself. When its flaming breath menaced our own shores, brave men—millions strong—arose to the nation's peril.

Over in France they supped full of the horrors of war. They witnessed the waste, the wreckage, the ruin of it. They beheld the stark reality of it. On many a scarred slope and battered hill they kept their rendezvous with Death—for Honor, for Country and for Humanity. They went through with the nasty business.

They finished their job right.

And now those that risked all are coming home.

We welcome these men with open arms. How thankful we are that their lives have been spared. How thankful for the daring, the valor and the might of these men that made such short shrift of the foe — for the stupendous feats that shortened the war and made unnecessary a sixth, a seventh, yes, even an eighth Liberty Loan.

Be grateful. Be generous.

In the Hour of Victory, do not count the cost.

FINISH THE JOB!

STATE PRISON BILL 'OUGHT TO PASS'

The Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives today reported as "ought to pass" a bill transferring the State Prison from Charlestown to the institution now known as the State Farm in Bridgewater. The bill also provides for the transfer of the control of the State Farm from the State Board of Charity to the Director of Prisons. The bill was reported without dissent.

The agitation for the removal of the State Prison from Charlestown dates back several years. Those who are pushing the project declare that the institution in Charlestown is a disgrace to the Commonwealth; that it is crowded, unsanitary and generally out of time with the twentieth century. The friends of the bill declare that it has a better chance to pass the present Legislature than has ever before been the case.

Firemen Rescue Man From Pit of an Elevator Shaft

It was necessary to enlist the services of the fire department to rescue John Bardnett, forty-one years old, of Silver street, South Boston, from the bottom of the elevator shaft in the office building at No. 7 Sudbury street today. Bardnett was found unconscious in the pit of the shaft when the building was opened, and nobody could tell how he got there.

The elevator in the shaft was stationed for the night three or four floors above, and it was believed that Bardnett had fallen from it. He was treated for a series of cuts and bruises in the Relief Hospital, where it was thought he may have sustained internal injuries.

DEVENS SOLDIER GETS 7 YEARS FOR THEFTS

Sergt. Davidson Found Guilty of Stealing $4,214 from Sick Army Men

Camp Devens, Ayer, April 25.—Found guilty by a court-martial board of stealing $4,214 from patients at the Base Hospital, of desertion and of passing a check for $100 on the manager of the Vinal Taxi Service, First Class Sergeant Robert J. Davidson, Medical Department, was sentenced to twenty years in the Federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans. The reviewing authorities cut the sentence to seven years. His home is on King street, Dorchester.

FORFEITS ALL PAY.

He will also be dishonorably discharged from the service, forfeiting all pay and allowances due or to become due while in confinement.

Davidson was property clerk at the hospital here during the influenza epidemic and had charge of the funds of the stricken soldiers. He was arrested by Federal agents in a Boston hotel. There was a young woman with him at the time.

At the trial Davidson stated that she was "planted there" by a clerk in the hotel and that he had nothing to do with her being there.

Testimony was given by several women that Davidson took them on joy rides to various summer resorts, including Pernerofi Inn, where he fell down stairs and injured his head.

WON $100 AT POKER.

Testifying in his own behalf Davidson said that when he entered the army, he had $1,000. Of this he had derived $100 from poker and later won $500 on a baseball pool on the result of the world series. This pool, he said, was held in the basement of a Boston hotel. He said he also won other sums by playing billiards in this hotel.

The remainder of the Yankee Division left here on special trains this morning for Boston to take part in the big parade.

HOW AMERICAN HELPED TO WIN THE WAR

On this great day, when the glorious Yankee Division passes before the admiring public in parade and review, the American presents in brief review a summary of its own part, metropolitan newspaper. In the old-fashioned struggle.

America was represented on battle field by scores of its correspondents who went forth to fight overseas. These did their full share to help win the war, and to them is due their individual measure of praise.

From a purely journalistic standpoint the American's patriotic activities may be broadly divided into two phases:

1—Publicity given to our military operations and allied activities.

2—Special promotion of enterprises to help win the war, stimulate patriotic effort and provide for our fighting men in one way and another.

For the returned soldiers of the Yankee Division and for all our American soldiers, sailors and marines who have been or are to be honorably discharged from service in the World War, the Boston American and allied Hearst newspapers are conducting a campaign for six months' pay to be awarded our heroes as an extra gratuity. The gigantic petition which is being circulated now contains six million signatures of American citizens.

The Boston American counts 163 names upon its honor roll. And the number on the service flag that floats before the Summer street office denotes that just 163 men went from the office of the American into war service.

IN MANY BRANCHES.

They went to the air service, to the [illegible] and all branches of the army. Many of them fought with the far-famed Yankee Division.

With this list must be mentioned Bert Ford, the correspondent for the International News Service, who followed the fortunes of the American boys abroad, and who kept their families at home in touch with their every action in his snappy, up-to-the-minute stories.

Ford was stationed at Camp Devens for months, while the boys were in training, and it was because of the quality of his stories that the International News Service in New York drafted him from the service of the Boston American for the post of their correspondent abroad.

Much of his service was connected with the Yankee Division. Previous to their entrainment for service overseas, Ford accompanied them to Hoboken, their point of embarkation, and from their wrote the gripping, thrilling stories of the 101st that later stirred New England. Though written at the time that the division embarked, they were released by the censor some time later and published in the American.

Although he visited practically every battlefield and every division in service, he was particularly allied with the Yankee Division and returned with the New England boys on the America, when that transport brought them home.

The full roster of names of the American's heroes on the roll of honor follows:

SEVERAL WOUNDED.

Several of these men were wounded. The bulk of them saw active service in combat units. Their deeds are part of the glorious national war history. Those who were with the 26th Division and who returned with that heroic command represent the American in Yankee Division Parade Day.

Employes of all departments of the Boston American subscribed a total of $104,200 to the first four Liberty Loans. This represents subscriptions of 1,225 persons.

The number of subscribers to the first loan totalled 563 and the amount of the subscription was $23,800; to the second, the subscribers numbered 200 and the amount totalled $15,650; to the third, subscribers 329 and amount subscribed $36,000; to the fourth, 123 subscribers and the amount $25,500.

These subscriptions were divided according to the varied plans outlined by the government, and they were in according to individual preferences.

WAR PUBLICITY FIGURES.

The Liberty Loan subscription been "inside honor roll," the story that was written by those who stayed at for those who went away to fight.

The general war publicity by the American may be summed up for space thus:

The Boston American and the Boston Sunday Advertiser and American have led the Boston newspaper field in amount of space given to war and patriotic enterprises in news articles, cartoons, editorials, features, photographs and comics. From January 1, 1917, to January 15, 1919, the American devoted 1,755,191 agate lines to special patriotic activity promotion of all kinds. The Advertiser was taken over by the Hearst interests in November, 1917. The Sunday Advertiser and American, from that time until January 15, 1919, devoted 823,277 agate lines to these same activities. The total of the two papers was 2,078,168 agate lines, out of a grand total of 3,169,897 agate lines printed during that two-year period by all the Boston newspapers, daily and Sunday.

In promotion of special patriotic enterprises the American was early on the field. President Wilson signed our declaration of war on April 6, 1917. Two days later the American opened and operated at its own expense four recruiting stations, through which many men were secured for the army, navy and Marine Corps.

On April 11, the Boston American, in co-operation with the other Hearst newspapers, began a movement and petition for universal military service. The petitions of the Hearst papers, with one and one-half million signatures, were presented to Congress when the draft bill was under consideration. Many thousands of the signatures were obtained by the Boston American.

CONDUCTS LOYALTY MEETING.

The Boston American conducted a great loyalty meeting on Boston Common on April 14, 1917, at which more than 60,000 persons pledged loyal support to President Wilson and the nation.

One of the principal fields of publicity and special promotion was in relation to the Liberty Loans. In every one of the first four Liberty Loan campaigns the American aided the district committees with more publicity than was given by any other Boston newspaper.

Mass meetings to boom the loan drives were arranged by this newspaper. Notable examples of these were meetings in Tremont Temple on October 23, 1917, and in Faneuil Hall on April 26, 1918. State and city officials, representatives of the Liberty Loan committees and of the military service spoke. Thousands of dollars' worth of bonds were sold at these gatherings.

In the First Liberty Loan drive the American published its celebrated "Eclipse the Kaiser" cartoon, devised by the late Ralph McMillan, whose patriotic poems were also a feature of our war publicity.

The War Stamp and Thrift Stamp campaigns were furthered extensively by The American's Letter-Writing Contest for New England public school children brought thousands of juvenile letters on the contest subject "How I Am Earning Money for War Savings Stamps."

ACTIVITIES FOR WOMEN.

A special department on "War Activities for Women" was conducted during the Summer of 1918 by one of the women of the American staff, who was also an accredited agent of the U. S. Bureau of Labor.

A Farm Labor Bureau was opened by the American with one of its staff as an accredited U. S. Farm Labor Agent.

At the suggestion of the American a Navy Day celebration was held in the Charles River Basin on June 29, 1918. Two hundred thousand spectators enjoyed a carnival of water sports put on by men and women in naval service. The American put up prizes consisting of 146 medals and two cups.

Other patriotic activities and enterprises arranged or furthered by the American included:

Five thousand dollar war song competition.

Soldiers' Service Bureau.

Free advertisements for discharged service men seeking employment.

"Smiles Across the Sea," by which moving pictures were taken by the International Film Service of thousands of relatives of men overseas. This great "movie" serial of the folks "back home" was sent across, and was shown to the boys at the front.

Fund for grandstand at Camp Devens, $4,230 raised by popular subscription.

Advocacy of absolute Federal control of food and fuel during the war.

Thirty articles on training soldiers.

Temperance publicity — with refusal in one month alone of nearly $10,000 worth of liquor advertising.

Freckles and Blotches Are Easily Peeled Off

If you are bothered with any cutaneous blemish, it's a poor plan to use paint, powder or anything else to cover it up. Too often this only emphasizes the defect. Besides, it's much easier to remove the disfigurement with ordinary mercolized wax. Applied nightly, the wax will gradually remove freckles, pimples, moth patches, liver spots, sallowness, red blotches or any surface eruption. The affected cuticle is actually absorbed, a little each day, until the clear, beautiful and beautiful skin beneath is brought gradually to view.

To use, dissolve one ounce of mercolized wax (any druggist can do this) in one cold cream. Remove in the morning with soap and water. Many who have tried this simple, harmless treatment report astonishing results.—Advertisement.

WHILE you have been making sacrifices to protect the homes of our loved Allies across the seas, your Government has been making sacrifices to protect the homes of your loved ones here. It has furnished you life insurance on the monthly-income-payment plan at a very low cost, because it has believed you would understand your duty to be just as obvious to your home as the duty of your civilian friends to theirs. The Government now tells you, and we emphasize it, that this duty is just as much yours now as when you were in the service. If you drop this Government life insurance, you deprive those who have wept and prayed for you of a need as great today as when you donned the khaki. Don't do it. SAW COUPLE ON ROAD TO SCENE OF CRIME

Girl Looked Like Murder Victim, Says Woman; Fails to Identify Warm

[Dateline] Vt., April 25. [illegible] of Robert [illegible] boy soldier, for [illegible] of Jennie Hemmingway in the Franklin County Court today Mrs. James McConnell testified that she saw a soldier and a girl pass down the road toward the place where Jennie's body was found in a cornfield, and did not see them return. The girl answered the description of the victim of the murder. Mrs. McConnell did not identify Warm as the soldier with the girl.

Joe Willey, the cousin of Jennie Hemmingway, who was with Warm when the body was found, was cross-examined by C. G. Austin, counsel for Warm. He testified that he and Warm searched another cornfield and a potato field before they entered the field where the body was found. There were no marks of a struggle near the body.

SKULL FRACTURED IN BACK BAY RACE RIOT

Joseph Hughes is lying at the point of death at the City Hospital, due to a fractured skull which he received in a small race riot which occurred at Massachusetts and Columbus avenues at 4 a. m. today, following a dance of colored waiters in the Paul Revere Hall of the Mechanics Building. The fight started outside the building earlier in the morning, but was quelled by Patrolmen Matty and Cronin of the Back Bay station. After the dance a number of colored men attacked a group of white men who were getting into an automobile at the corner named. After the fight, which was participated in by a score of men, the white men drove off, leaving Hughes unconscious in the gutter. Two men have been placed under arrest by Sergeant Carey of the East Dedham street station and are being held pending an inquiry into the affair.

Why Red Blood Rich in Iron Helps Make Women Strong, Healthy and Beautiful—

While Lack of Iron Keeps Them Weak, Nervous, Fretful and Run-down.

How Organic Iron—Nuxated Iron—helps Solve Problem of Supplying Iron Deficiency, Thereby Increasing the Strength and Endurance of Delicate, Care-worn Women in Two Weeks' Time in Many Instances.

Many a woman who ought still to be young in feeling is losing the old-time vim and energy that makes life worth living simply because her blood is thinning out and possibly starving through lack of iron. It is through iron in the red coloring matter of the blood that life-sustaining oxygen enters the body and exhibits the blood to change food into living tissue, muscle and brain.

In commenting upon the alarming iron deficiency in the blood of the average woman of today, Dr. George H. Baker, formerly Physician and Surgeon Monmouth Memorial Hospital of New Jersey said:

"What women need to put roses in their cheeks and the springtime of life into their step is not cosmetics or stimulating drugs, but plenty of rich, pure, red blood. Without it no one can possibly succeed or be at her best in work, love or play. Iron is one of the greatest of all strength and blood builders, and I have found nothing in my experience so effective for helping to make strong, healthy, red blooded women as Nuxated Iron. From a careful examination of the formula and my own tests of Nuxated Iron, I feel convinced that it is a preparation which any physician can take himself or prescribe for his patients with the utmost confidence of obtaining highly beneficial and satisfactory results."

Dr. Ferdinand King, a New York Physician and Medical Author, says: "I have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors should prescribe more organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for their nervous, run-down, weak, haggard-looking women patients. Lack of iron in the blood may often transform a beautiful wood-nymph woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable—one who makes a burden to herself, unbearable for her husband, and disagreeable for her children. When the iron goes from the blood of women, the roses go from their cheeks."

If you are not strong or well you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

ORLANDO TO SUBMIT CASE TO PARLIAMENT

PREMIER PLANS TO RESIGN

Some Italian Delegates Favor Withdrawing From League of Nations

By International News Service.

London, April 25.—Premier Orlando of Italy plans to hand his resignation to King Victor Emmanuel and then converse with the Chamber of Deputies on the Fiume situation, says a dispatch from Rome.

If Premier Orlando returns to Paris he expects to be greatly strengthened upon his arrival.

A group of Italian deputies today adopted a resolution calling upon Italy to withdraw from the League of Nations unless Italy obtains Fiume, Zara and the Dalmatian Islands, another dispatch says.

The following communique has been issued by the Council of Four:

"Before his departure for Rome, Signor Orlando, accompanied by Baron Sonnino, had another meeting with the President of the United States, Mr. Lloyd George and M. Clemenceau. Throughout the discussion all present displayed the strongest desire to reach a satisfactory solution of the problems under consideration. The heads of the American, British and French governments expressed to Signor Orlando the hope that the Italian Parliament would also assent in arriving at such a settlement."

ORLANDO'S ESCORT ATTACKED.

An attack was made upon the escort of Premier Orlando of Italy just before he left for Rome last night. Six persons were wounded in the fighting.

The actual facts are said to be that a French policeman precipitated the trouble when he demanded of the Italian guard why the Italians were leaving Paris. The whole affair may have started in a jest, but for a time it threatened serious consequences. Cooler heads intervened and restored order. Feeling is tense.

"We are going to uphold the honor and dignity of Italy, but so far no factual break has taken place in the peace discussions," said Premier Orlando just before his train left.

SONNINO REMAINS.

It is significant that Baron Sonnino, the Italian foreign minister and the "strong man" of the Italian delegation, remained behind. Italy, therefore, is in a position to resume the conference even with Premier Orlando absent.

The American delegates are counselling extreme moderation in handling the latest phase of the Italian-Jugo-Slav dispute, realizing the grave dangers that would result from any false move.

President Wilson, however, is still standing pat upon the principles announced in his public statement on Wednesday when he opposed Italy's claims to Fiume.

There is a disposition in some quarters to consider the Italian problem less acute than it was twenty-four hours ago. It was pointed out in these circles that the Italians carefully avoided any admission that there had been a complete rupture. The Italians stated that the negotiations had been suspended. Included in the party that left Paris with Premier Orlando were Dr. Bargilla, for many years champion of Italian irredentism in the Chamber of Deputies, and Gen. Diaz, commander of the Italian army.

Late Cable Bulletins!

BERLIN — The Rumanians have refused to grant an armistice to the Hungarian Reds, and fighting continues, according to information from Vienna.

LONDON — German newspapers which are following the peace deadlock at Paris closely are generally supporting Italy, said a Central News dispatch from Amsterdam this afternoon.

COPENHAGEN — The government has declared a state of siege throughout Saxony, said a Berlin dispatch to the Politiken today.

LONDON — Twenty thousand Bolshevik soldiers, encamped along the Pryjze River, have surrendered to the anti-Bolshevik forces, says an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Berlin.

AN AGREEMENT POSSIBLE.

Although declarations of the most incendiary character have been made there are indications that matters are developing beneath the surface which promise an agreement. Whether this will take the form of making Fiume a free port under the administration of the League of Nations cannot be foretold, but that is held to be one of the eleventh-hour possibilities. It has the support of President Wilson.

A personal canvass shows that a majority of the peace delegations are disposed to sympathize with the Italian claims, but at the same time they acknowledge that President Wilson is right in the stand he has taken. Unless he acted when he did the conference might have come to an end by this time.

The President's declaration, it is said, was not intended to precipitate the Italian crisis, but was called forth by the failure of the Italian imperialists to understand the exact situation.

It has been pointed out for more than a fortnight that if peace does not develop it will be due to a single nation.

TO PREVENT FUTURE WARS.

The United States, Great Britain and France are in accord on all the big questions. While they are anxious for a complete agreement at the earliest possible moment, they are willing to wait or make concessions so long as the main principles are not affected. Should an emergency arise, however, they are ready to stand alone, and before the rest of the world and compel the acceptance of terms that will prevent future wars.

Alarmist declarations published in the United States that the Italian crisis marked the end of the conference were denounced in official circles here. They were characterized as being on a par with the sensational [illegible] of the armistice period. [illegible] which the report was based untrue.

President Wilson is making it plain to his colleagues on the American mission that it is necessary for everyone to continue transacting business "on an even keel." The American delegates were warned not to allow prejudice or personal opinion to influence them.

Following the conference between the President and the Italian delegates late Thursday afternoon President Wilson was personally informed by Count Di Cellere, the Italian ambassador to the United States, that the real Italians are most reasonable and he expressed the hope that the country would be willing to wait to allow Premier Orlando to confer with Parliament.

Bert Ford's Tales of the YD

All New England will be eager to read Brigadier-General Charles H. Cole's own story of the work and achievements of the 32nd Infantry Brigade, as he gave Bert Ford the narrative in his billet in the Recomay area before the Yankee Division sailed for home.

The accomplishments of the brigade, composed of the 103rd and the 104th Infantry Regiments, are embodied in Chapter XVII. of Mr. Ford's "Tales of the Y. D." published today, and will be resumed in Chapter XVIII., to be published in the Boston American tomorrow.

Said General Cole: "During our training period in the Chemin-des-Dames sector one regiment had to march six miles and another eight miles, stand in mud and slush in the trenches seven hours, march back to billets at 8 in the morning, get up for reveille at 6 and shoes were so warped and frozen they couldn't get their sore feet fully into them. It was wonderful how our men from New England stood the hardships."

By BERT FORD.

Chapter XVII.

Copyright, 1919, by the Boston American.

Everybody in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Massachusetts will be interested in the record made by the 52d Infantry Brigade, as told by Brigadier-General Charles H. Cole, its commander, because it is made up of increments from all of the New England States.

There was not a more vigorous army in the Yankee Division.

General Cole was the first general officer to take over a front line brigade sub-sector of a divisional front in the A. E. F. He was also the first National Guard officer to take over a front line command in France, and Colonel Edward L. Logan was the first National Guard colonel to take over a regimental front on the battle line.

The 26th Division was the first American division to fill a divisional sector when it entered the line at Toul.

The 52d Infantry Brigade never lost ground on either the offensive or defensive. It did not know the meaning of "retreat," and ignored the term "No Man's Land," because its patrols penetrated wherever and whenever necessity demanded.

The 52nd Brigade took 1,500 prisoners. It gained thirty kilometers of enemy ground. Its total casualties was 5,000.

The 103rd Infantry, commanded by Colonel Frank M. Hume of Houlton, Me., never lost a prisoner while holding a defensive sector, a record equalled by few and surpassed by no other American regiment.

TIP-TOP FIGHTING MACHINE.

The 103rd Infantry was a tip-top fighting machine. It has not received its share of publicity. Officers and men complained that the home newspapers never devoted enough space to regimental affairs and exploits. It was made up chiefly of National Guardsmen from Maine, with recruits from Vermont and New Hampshire.

It was the only New England organization with full-blooded Indians in its ranks, a squad of genuine Americans from the Passamaquaddy tribe, every one of whom fought true to form and every one of them either killed or wounded. Colonel Hume said there were no braver lads in his command than the young warriors from the Maine tribe.

The 103d Infantry lost 393 killed and about 2,600 wounded. Like their commanders, both of whom were removed and reinstated, the 103d and 101st Infantry regiments were bound by close ties, although in different brigades, and there were no better shock troops in Europe.

A PAPER RAIDING PARTY TRAGIC

The fate of Lieutenant Howard and his raiding party was one of the most tragic losses in General Cole's brigade. Lieutenant Howard, efficient and fearless, was ordered to take a hazardous objective, north of Verdun, on October 14. The little raiding party penetrated the enemy line, but not one of them came back.

When the column advanced several days later, Lieutenant Howard and his band of 29 patriots were found dead, close to their objective, and every man was facing the enemy. Hopelessly outnumbered, they fought until the last man fell.

Lieutenant Bates, who arrived ten days before from a military school in California, was ordered, on September 26, to make a bayonet charge on Marcheville where machine guns bristled. With his platoon he charged the town and took it and shielded another attacking force.

Captain Phillips was placed in command of a battalion in the attack at Chateau-Thierry. Shot in the stomach, he ordered another to take command and told his battalion to push on and not to bother about him.

General Cole praised the work of Joseph O'Connor, a young Worcester surgeon, who had been his adjutant, and who was promoted from captain to major and sent to the staff college, where he became an instructor. Lieutenant Francis Logan, brother of Colonel Logan, succeeded Major O'Connor as adjutant to General Cole, and Frank won a captain's bars before he came home.

General Cole also had praise for Lieutenant Horton Edmunds, formerly a reporter on the Boston Herald, who, although married a little more than a year and just become daddy of a bouncing son, cast his lot with the army, won a commission at Plattsburg, was transferred to the Yankee Division before it sailed and was assigned to the line in the 52d Brigade.

LIEUT EDMUNDS A CORKER.

"Lieutenant Edmunds developed into a 'corker,' said General Cole. "He led an attack one day that looked like certain death and lived to tell it. You wouldn't think he had the dash and nerve he showed in action, he is so quiet and good-natured, but he was there. It was in his blood. His father, Colonel Edmunds, formerly commanded the First Corps of Cadets. When it comes to handing out bouquets I ought really to mention by name every officer in the 52d Brigade because they all proved themselves to be Americans and soldiers. I cannot praise them too highly, officers and men alike.

"Every man in the brigade mourned the death of Colonel P. W. Arnold, who was with the 301st Infantry of the 76th Division, before being transferred to our brigade and assigned to the 102d Infantry. Colonel Arnold succeeded Colonel Hume, the idol of his regiment, and coming a stranger at such a delicate time his task was anything but easy. But his sense of fair play, knowledge of human nature, cheerful personality and ability as a soldier soon ingratiated him with officers and men.

"He tripped in the dark one night and fell down a flight of stairs, sustaining a double fracture of the skull, and never regained consciousness. Although under my command but six weeks, I had written on the very night of his death a recommendation for his promotion to brigadier-general. By his death the regiment lost a splendid leader, an able executive and an officer of the highest quality and character."

At this juncture General Cole paused to sign a batch of urgent army documents and then proceeded with his own narrative of the accomplishments of his brigade. We were seated before an open fire in his billet in the Recomay area.

ORGANIZED AT WESTFIELD.

"The 52d Infantry Brigade," said General Cole, "was organized at Westfield, Mass., August 26, 1917. The 103d Infantry was made up of the Second Maine National Guard, 1,600 men from the First New Hampshire Regiment and increments from the First Vermont Infantry and the Sixth and Eighth Massachusetts Regiments.

"The 104th Infantry was an all-Massachusetts regiment, made up from the Second, Sixth and Eighth Infantry Regiments of the National Guard. The 103d Machine Gun Battalion was made up of two troops of Rhode Island cavalry, one troop from Connecticut and another troop from New Hampshire. It can be seen that the 52d Infantry Brigade was distinctly an all-New England brigade.

"The first elements left Westfield the latter part of September, 1917, and arrived in England and France early in October. The entire brigade was in France by October 25. When we arrived, the only means of transportation was a broken down flivver, and the acting division commander used that.

"The brigade went immediately into training under the 162d French Infantry, commanded by Colonel Bertrand and the 151st French Infantry, Colonel Molasson. These were noted French regiments. The instruction was intensive. In addition to policing camp and billets, bathing, washing and other work, six hours were devoted every day to drill, snow, rain or shine.

"Instructions included work with the automatic rifle, machine guns, 37-millimeter Stokes mortars, hand grenades, rifle grenade firing, gas protection and all kinds of trench warfare.

BILLETS IN BARNS.

"Our billets were in barns, old and airy, but the men never complained. The weather was bleak and damp. During the latter part of the training period one of our regiments had to march six miles and another eight miles to the trenches, stand there seven hours in the mud, slush and water in a biting temperature, and hike back, marching back to billets at one and two in the morning and had to turn out again at 6 a. m. for reveille.

"Often their shoes were so warped and frozen that they couldn't get their sore feet fully into them, but they reported like soldiers with scarcely any sleep. Still no complaint.

"It was wonderful the way our men from New England stood the hardships preliminary to actual battle.

"On February 1 the first element started for Chemin-des-Dames, where the brigade went into the front line with the 22d French Division, General Caperont. We first assigned platoons between French platoons, then companies between French companies, battalions between French battalions, and finally regiments were sandwiched between French regiments to give them confidence.

A FIRST-CLASS SHOCK DIVISION.

"The training and experience received in the Chemin-Des-Dames sector was valuable. The Yankee Division was far better able to stand intensive shelling and to weather the storm later on than many other divisions that had to be rushed into action in the heat of operations. The training with the experience derived in the Toul sector made the Yankee Division a first-class shock division.

"We remained in the Chemin-des-Dames sector until March 21. While there the 104th Infantry made the first successful repulse of a German raid of any unit in the American army.

"The 104th Infantry also captured the first German prisoner taken by American troops. The 104th Infantry was complimented by the French division commander for defeating the German raid. He said that although they had been in the front line only twenty days they buried the Germans back like veterans.

"The 103rd and 104th Infantry were both complimented for their gas disciplins while in this sector. In gas attacks our regiments suffered only about one-sixth as many casualties the French who were in the same attack.

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble.

Meat forms uric acid, which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular relief from meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; remove all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back, or sick headache, disordered stomach, nervousness, sleeplessness and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's poisonous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Here is a valuable tip for men and women who have had kidney trouble. Advertisement.

HISTORY of the YANKEE DIVISION

by HARRY A. BENWELL

COLE AND LOGAN RELIEVED OF THEIR COMMANDS

This is the twenty-sixth instalment of the "History of the Yankee Division," which began in the Sunday Advertiser-American on March 30.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Praised for Action at Hattonchatel.

On October 23 General Edwards issued a citation of his troops for their work in the operations at Hattonchatel. This citation, which was issued in General Orders, read:

"1. The division commander extends to the commanding officer, 51st Infantry Brigade, and the officers and men of the following organizations, his hearty congratulations on their great success in the operations of this date for the capture of the heights of the Meuse in the region of Le Houppy Bois and Belieu Bois: 51st Infantry Brigade, 101st Infantry, 102d Infantry, 101st Machine Gun Battalion, 102d Machine Gun Battalion, Detachment, 101st Field Signal Battalion; Detachment, 101st Sanitary Train; 28lst Aero Squadron (French), Balloon No. 25 (French), 51st Artillery Brigade and 1st Battalion, 211th Field Artillery (French).

"2. The attack as planned was difficult of execution, and only to be attempted by trained troops. You carried it out like the veterans you are, and with a dash and valor worthy of the best traditions of the 26th Division.

(Signed) "C. R. EDWARDS,
"Major-General, Commanding."

In connection with the above operations the following tribute was paid by the French corps commander:

Headquarters, Oct. 24, 1918.
Seventeenth Army Corps
Staff, 1st Bureau.

"From General Claudel, commanding the Seventeenth Army Corps.

"To the Commanding General, Twenty-sixth Division.

"General—The reputation of your division preceded it here far ahead. To all its titles of glory gained in fierce struggles, and only recently at the signal of Hattonchatel, it has added on the 23d of October a page which perhaps is more modest, but still does it great honor.

In a few hours, as at a maneuvre, it has gained all the objectives assigned it in the difficult sector of the Woods of Houppy, Etraves and Belieu.

"This operation is evidence, indeed, of valor, of instruction, mobility and will.

"I do not know how to thank you sufficiently for your assistance, dear General, and it is my great desire to express to you all our grateful admiration for your splendid division which thus has added its name to all of those who have fought to hurt the enemy back from the outskirts of Verdun."

BAMFORD TAKES COMMAND.

On October 26 Brigadier-General Bamford arrived, and General Edwards took his last farewell. He had been given permission to take with him one aide, and, therefore, asked for and obtained Major Hiatt, who had been with him for years. His aide at the time of his departure was Lieutenant Daniel Willard of the artillery, a son of the president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

The final leave-taking was described by Dr. Morton Prince of Boston, in a letter to Governor McCall of Massachusetts. He said in part:

The American soldier from every part of the Union, as all know, has won his place as a fighting man, and the Yankee Division has earned a fame that can never be taken from it. It need only point to its record when asked, "What have you done?" Although the boys have been almost continually fighting for nine months with scarcely a respite, they are still full of grit. The morale is as fine as ever, and the esprit de corps and pride in the division undiminished.

I mention these things now because the final chapter in its war history is completed, the division having just ridden goodby and godspeed to its beloved commander, who has handed over his devoted troops to another's able hands.

His great work in the field is finished unless the war continues. He trained and welded into a fighting unit an inexperienced collection of 27,000 men, a little army in itself, self-sustaining in that it comprised every branch of the service—infantry, artillery, transport, intelligence, supplies, medical corps, etc., and then he led them—and fought them to victory in one battlefield after another.

No wonder his soldiers are proud of their chief. His great talents as a soldier, testified to by his corps and Army commanders are now to be utilized by the high command for other important service.

I arrived at divisional P. C. the advanced post of command during a battle just as the commanding general was transferring his command to his successor, an able officer of experience who surely will lead the Yankee Division to further victories. Headquarters was a picturesque group of dugouts arranged in two rows facing one another along an alley overhead overhead with boughs of leaves from enemy aeroplanes.

EDWARDS ALONE CHEERFUL.

In the commanding general's dugout were high officers and members of his staff, while in the alley were grouped other staff officers and headquarters troops. It was hot natural and pardonable that depression and gloom were depicted on the faces of all and that they should speak in subdued voices.

Though anxious to give the same loyalty to their new commander, they could for the moment, think only of the past. They were losing their chief to whom they owed everything, and whom they had followed during nine months of constant fighting.

The departing general was the only cheery one of the lot. Whatever he may have felt when leaving the soldiers he loved and who loved him, he did not betray; nor did he give the least sign of his private sorrows, for sudden news had just brought grief into his heart in the death of his only and very near to him—his own daughter and an aide who was like an own son. This we all knew. But private grief was not allowed to enter with duty. He was a soldier through and through.

A few routine details had to be finished, papers had to be signed. Then came the presentation of his staff to the new commander, with a generous word of commendation for each; a word of good-by and a grasp of the hand with one another; the same with a kind word to each enlisted man at headquarters; then he sprang into the motor car. I, at his invitation, was privileged to accompany him, and with a wave of his hand and a last cheery, good-by we were off, leaving and faces behind us.

The next day, after a night at the main working headquarters, a final good-by was said by the remainder of the staff, and as we turned back from where the departing motor left us we heard the explosion of a great 14-inch shell that dropped its fragments close to the car as it sped away, as if the German, in a last vain effort, sought to destroy in impotent rage the man who had beaten them on many a field, and there came to us from a distance the cheers of the soldiers wishing their general Godspeed.

There is not a soldier or officer in the division that does not know the general's departure as a personal loss.

COLONEL LOGAN'S REMOVAL.

Following the relief of General Edwards the division sustained another shock when Colonel Logan was relieved from command of the 101st Infantry. With this famous Boston outfit, a part of which as the old 9th Massachusetts he had commanded on the Mexican border, Colonel Logan had taken part in every battle fought by the division. The regiment was considered one of the best in the Yankee Division, and Colonel Logan was always actively in command during its engagements. He was sent to the reclassification area at the rear and there acted as counsel for officers sent to Blois or Hendreconi for reclassification. He never lost a case.

A week after Colonel Logan's departure Colonel Frank R. Hume of the 103d Infantry was also summarily removed from command and sent to the rear. That left only Brigadier-General Cole, Colonel Bunnell of the Engineers and Colonel W. J. Keville of the Ammunition Train as the only commanding officers who went abroad with the division. Major Pendleton, the Gen-1 appointed by General Edwards, who had the task of looking after supplies from Neufchateau to Verdun, was also relieved and sent home.

Lieutenant-Colonel Cassius M. Dowell, who had been the Gen-3 or operations officer of the division, was given command of the 105th, and his post was taken by Captain Simmons. H. Taylor of Hartford, who had been Colonel Dowell's assistant. Colonel Dowell first appeared in the division as chief of staff, succeeding Colonel Sheldon. He was replaced by Colonel Duncan K. Major and then sent away to a staff school.

Colonel Logan was replaced by Colonel Horace B. Hobbs, who had been division inspector for a few months.

COLE NEXT TO GO.

The next blow sustained by the New Englanders came on November 8, just three days before the signing of the armistice, and was a crushing one. It consisted in no less than the removal of Brigadier-General Charles H. Cole from the command of the 52d Infantry Brigade, which he had held from the time of its organization. Officers and men alike were stunned. They wondered where the lightning would next strike. Great was the astonishment, not to say a stronger feeling, when it was learned that General Cole was charged with lack of "aggression" and permitting his troops to fraternize with the enemy.

The unit who had led one of the most famous brigades in the American Expeditionary Force, a brigade which, like the 104th Infantry, the first American regiment to be decorated by the French, was not considered aggressive! It was also pointed out that General Cole had issued orders prohibiting fraternization before such orders came down from the 26th command.

General Cole was relieved by an order from Brigadier-General Bamford, who had been in command of the division but a short time, and knew practically nothing concerning his brigade commanders or other officers.

"I immediately demanded a board of inquiry," said General Cole. "They never called it. I was reinstated by special order of General Pershing, as were both Colonel Logan and Colonel Hume. They never asked me to submit any evidence in support of my assertion that there was no foundation for the charges against me. And they never submitted any evidence in support of the charge, although the burden of proof was on them. They didn't have anything to submit."

The other regiment in General Cole's command, the 104th, was cited by both the French and the American high commands for valor in action, and has a record for prisoners captured superior to any unit in the American forces in France.

General Cole's report to General Pershing gave a detailed account of the work of the 52nd Brigade, showing that it had earned the plaudits of the French during the hardest fighting of the war.

He also showed that he had served under eight division commanders without a single complaint.

Within a short time official vindication and reinstatement was received by the Massachusetts officer in the following order:

BRIGADIER REINSTATED.

"FRANCE, Nov. 30, 1918.

"From: Adjutant-General, American Expeditionary Forces.

"To: Brigadier-General Charles H. Cole, Chief of Infantry, A. P. O. 714, American Expeditionary Forces.

"Subject: Relief from Fifty-second Infantry Brigade.

"1. I am directed by the Commander-in-Chief to inform you that upon his personal examination of the papers reporting the facts incident to your relief from command of the Fifty-second Brigade, he is of the opinion that the facts did not warrant your relief, and he has therefore directed that you be reinstated to your former brigade.

"2. Accordingly, orders will be issued in the near future.

"By command of General Pershing.

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
"Adjutant-General."

The reinstatement of Colonels Logan and Hume did not come until February 4, during which time Colonel Logan was busily engaged at Blois acting as counsel for other officers so unfortunate as to come beneath the ban of General Headquarters.

Continued Tomorrow.

This "History of the Yankee Division" will be published in book form by the Cornhill Company. There will be blank form pages in each book, whereby every soldier can make a permanent record of the dates and events of his service in the division. It will be on sale at all book stores, on the newsstands and at the hotels and clubs.

Sign this petition, get your friends to sign it, and forward it to the Boston American, 80 Summer st., Boston, Mass.

To the Honorable Newton D. Baker Secretary of War:

To the Honorable Josephus Daniels Secretary of the Navy:

The undersigned respectfully urge you to return to their homes as soon as possible the soldiers, sailors and marines who have accomplished so brilliantly every object America had in the war.

We urge also that you obtain the necessary authority to pay these men their military wages for six months or for some sufficient period after their discharge from the army until they can obtain useful and remunerative employment.

We urge this as an act of simple justice by a great nation to its heroes.

Who's Who in the 26th Division

Major John W. Hyatt, aide to Major-General Edwards at the Department of the Northeast, Boston, was born in Turkey Cove, Va., forty years ago. Graduating from Virginia Military Institute in 1900 he remained there two years as assistant instructor. In 4902 he was commissioned second lieutenant and assigned to the 16th U. S. Infantry and attached to Fort McPherson, Ga. He went to the Philippines with the regiment and became Quartermaster at a post on Mariveles Island, where 500 prisoners worked in a quarry getting out rock for government roads. He resigned in October, 1906, and went into the banking business at Norton, Va., in which he remained for five years. In 1911 he entered the manufacturing field at Richlands, Va. When the World War began in 1914 he was reinstated in the United States Army as second lieutenant and assigned to the 5th Infantry. He served with that organization in Panama until appointed in July, 1916, aide to Major-General Edwards, who was then in command of our troops in Panama. Major Hyatt has been with Major-General Edwards as aide ever since. He went to France with the rank of captain.

Filene's—Misses' velour, silvertone, crystal cord satin, moire and cherry-lined serge CAPES, $29.75

have come to the street floor shop for this week-end

One specialty of the street floor hat shop, and a very big excuse for its being, is just such little trimmed hats as these at $5.

Georgette-faced lisere trimmed hats with transparent horsehair crowns, head trimmed transparent hats, fruit trimmed little lisere poke hats, crepe-faced lisere hats with glycerined crowns, and so on.

White flowers are used they are of the finer varieties, many of silk. And so are ribbons, facings, fronts, and other trimmings.

A misses' crystal tipped Bolivia Cape, $29.75

Women's new voile blouses in the flowery patterns of Georgette, $2

The sketch shows the idea—in style and color the blouses resemble Georgette, but the price is much lower. The round-neck blouse in the picture may be had in pink or blue figures, $2.

Other figured voile blouses, with artfully pretty collar and cuff set of organdy, $2.

Filene's—mail orders filled—fifth floor

Misses' long-line blouse suits, $35

This is the season of the Blouse Suit. There are two entirely different types—the straight blouse with the belt at the normal waistline, and the newer long-waisted blouse suit that is entirely new—and the latter is by far the smartest on a girl who wears her clothes well.

—The suit sketched is navy blue serge. $35.

200 new capes for the week end

—crystal tipped Bolivias, vestee fronts, figured silk linings.

Women's taffeta frocks with all-over embroidered blouses, $14

Embroidered taffeta frocks are a surprise at $14, especially when one feels the good weight, soft, live taffeta. Their Georgette sleeves make them cool enough all summer. In navy or Danish blue, sizes 34 to 42.

These dresses are an excellent example of the surprisingly good littler frocks this shop brings out constantly, none costing more than $14.

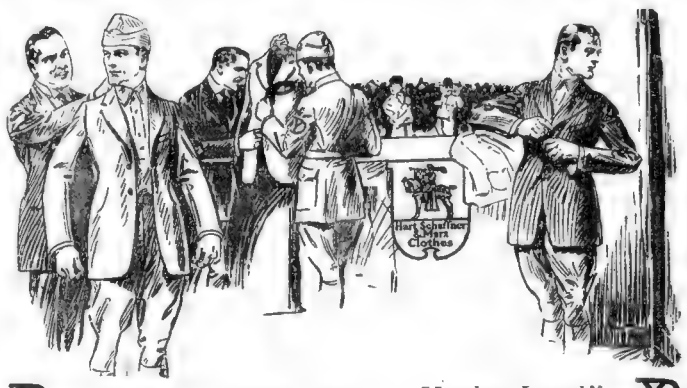
"CAN I BE CURED?" SAYS THE SUFFERER



"From No Man's Land to Yankee Land"

From war to peace. From trouble to happiness. Our boys, God bless them, are home. Our conquerors—our victors—our hard-hitting, clean-living boys of the 26th Division. While you've been away we've sacrificed—a little sacrifice as compared with yours. And now with the new era of reconstruction, we shall strive as resolutely as ever to do our full share.

As our soldiers come back to civil life one of the first things they'll need is good, stylish clothes. That's where we can render a real service. Not only to the returning men, but to you men at home.

The Young Men's Stores of Boston

EVERY young man returning from service and those who stayed at home are more than pleased with the military bearing in our spring clothes—the first thing they want to be sure about is the style in clothes; the second is quality; the best isn't too good for them.

Hart Schaffner & Marx

The greatest makers of good clothes in this good old U. S. A., makers of the clothes you boys of the 26th have been reading about in the Stars and Stripes, and the Paris editions of the New York Herald and Chicago Tribune, have given us the best of everything.

Suits and Overcoats, single and double-breasted. They have the military look, but they are also business clothes. Prices

$30 $35 $40 $45 $50

Satisfaction Guaranteed

When you buy Hart Schaffner & Marx clothes you are entitled to complete satisfaction. You will get all-wool or wool-and-silk fabrics, thoroughly shrunk; all seams silk-sewed, tailored in clean, sanitary shops, correct in style. If the clothes are not right or not wholly satisfactory, your money will be refunded

Waist Seam Suits for Young Men

There's something about the waist-seam suits and overcoats that makes a man stand erect; he can't help it; they force the chest out, the shoulders back. The returning fighters don't need that, but they like the styles; they're just the thing, too, for the young men who couldn't go. Single-breasted, double-breasted, vertical pockets, crescent pockets—many variations in many fabrics. Exceptional values

DEMPSEY ALWAYS A LIKELY LAD WITH HIS DUKES

By Damon Runyon.

Copyright, 1919, by Damon Runyon.

Before I get off on that tangent suggested by the name of Jack McKenna I had escorted William Harrison Dempsey by a devious lingual route up to the manner in which he "Jack."

As I was saying, William Harrison's brother, Bernard did a bit of fighting as Jack Dempsey, but it seems Bernard was no great shucks as a ringman.

Give him a nice, little, comfortable [illegible] and no holds barred, and Bernard could step a little best of them, but gloves and ropes and the like hamper him.

He fought some around the mining camps of Colorado for several years and finally withdrew from the ring to [illegible]. Meantime, his brother, William Harrison, was content to [illegible] loosely, and William Harrison picked up the name of Jack.

I doubt if he had at that time [illegible]

a great deal of Jack Dempsey, the [illegible] "Compare! Now of course he knows all about him and is very proud of the fact that he bears the name of one of the greatest champions the ring has ever known. Incidentally, [illegible] name has been quite an asset to him.

William Dempsey disposed of his farm in Kentucky valley farm when Jack was [illegible] to young to [illegible] and [illegible] the western slope of Colorado, a great [illegible] farming and fruit-raising region [illegible] secured another farm in [illegible] conjunction [illegible] the Ute Indian country, and he [illegible] and the [illegible] are growing up there and in the [illegible].

Montrose [illegible] one of the [illegible] of the western part [illegible] and it was there Dempsey began [illegible] career.

DIDN'T BOTHER ABOUT INDIANS.

Incidentally, it was there Dempsey [illegible] Jack London and Ade, and the other celebrated boys [illegible].

It would sound most romantic to say I spent much of my boyhood among the picturesque Utes, Dempsey says, but as a matter of fact I didn't thing of the kind. He doesn't know any more about Indians than you do a dozen less.

Nearly every boy who is raised in the country has to have a [illegible] to ride around, the Indian [illegible] was no more picturesque than [illegible] colorful, for there are Indians and [illegible] over the Colorado premises. Ordinarily they are Indians who are [illegible] reduced to [illegible] reservations [illegible] extent.

And I don't know that a raised among the Indians fellow would have much to rave about anyway. So far as I've [illegible] Dempsey among the Indians. Let's ask him in Montrose a hunting little city of homes which he will wear, but by no manner of means will Wear, but by no manner of means will Wear, but by no manner of means will a man would have a tough time making a living in Montrose, Colorado.

It's no nice town mark you. It's a progressive, up-to-date community [illegible] of a great agricultural and horticultural district. Folks have plenty of money out there. An acre of land is worth something in that region.

I have no detailed information concerning Dempsey's boyhood, but I gather that he early showed a bent toward the career on which he has now [illegible]. That is to say I gather he was [illegible] knocking with the [illegible] and [illegible] of the [illegible] pieces. I know around Montrose myself when I was a youth.

I wasn't so hard to get [illegible] fights, I can tell you. I [illegible] myself [illegible] when it came [illegible].

DEMPSEY BROTHERS KNEW GAME.

From the time I was [illegible] I [illegible] fighting and [illegible] rumble around with [illegible]. And I am by no means [illegible] up now and then. Most of the [illegible] I take [illegible] I get [illegible] to take care of [illegible] swing [illegible].

My little brother [illegible] was quite a fighter, says [illegible]. He was [illegible] and [illegible] I left Bernard I had learned [illegible] full extent [illegible] and [illegible] addition [illegible] and [illegible] and nature [illegible] I [illegible] was an [illegible] equal on to [illegible] Dempsey boys were. I [illegible] brood to be [illegible] several [illegible] by any one [illegible].

They not only boxed a lot among themselves but they were [illegible] played baseball, and [illegible].

The boys of [illegible] Colorado were [illegible] outdoors a lot, and the breath of the [illegible] mingled with their [illegible]. They are strong and [illegible] because they [illegible] help be [illegible].

[illegible] a magnificent physique is [illegible] to the ideal strain of [illegible] but to the youth out [illegible] the [illegible] Dempsey [illegible] a man [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Two small lots of greasy 64-70s Ex. Sup. Warp in the Australians went for $2.04 per pound clean. There was good bidding for the better Australian wools and more lots sold at top prices than usual.

A feature of the auctions was the unusually large number of lots of South American wools offered. Nearly 500,000 pounds of South American B. A. 48 went for 74 cents per pound clean.

TRADE BUYING HELPS ADVANCE COTTON PRICES

New York, April 25.—Trade buying, coupled with demand from the South and Liverpool, advanced prices at the opening of the cotton market today 5 to 11 points. Trading was not in large volume, but the undertone was steady and later prices more than held to the opening quotations.

Local operators sold on the foreign news and on the weather map. The first notice day for May delivery brought only two notices. Liverpool cables made a firm showing and both Manchester and domestic cloth market reports continued bullish.

Opening prices were: May, new 27.85; July, old 28.10, new 26.57; October, new 24.60; November, new 24.60; December, new 24.39.

General Motors Advances More Than Three Points in Active Market

By W. H. ROSS,
Financial Editor.

Stocks were strong in New York in the afternoon, with unlooked-for buying the day around o'clock. U. S. Steel had sold at 100¾ and General Motors had advanced more than three points to 151¾. International Marine issues were still strong, and there were holding gains. Leathers had receded. Oil rails were a strong group, with Texas & Pacific in the lead, it sold at its highest for six-teen years. Sugars were also fractionally higher. It is said that banking interests have resumed buying of this stock. Tobaccos were weak as a class.

TRADING WAS ACTIVE.

The market was active during the morning, but trading was not of as large volume as on previous days this week. First hour transactions did not quite total 300,000 shares. At the opening prices were irregular and it was evident that outside buying had greatly diminished. This was attributed to the reaction at the close of the previous session, the public seldom wanting stocks when prices begin to fall. Under selling pressure prices quickly declined, but rallied before the end of the first hour, and the market was strong gin the second. The situation at Paris was bearish, but traders were rather expectant of a settlement of the Italian difficulty and a consequent rebound and this restricted short commitments.

GAINS IN THE AFTERNOON.

Gains in the afternoon included U. S. Steel 2¾ at 100¾, General Motors 1¾ at 151¾, Studebaker 1⅜ at 77¼, Missouri, Kansas & Texas common 1¾ at 11¾, preferred 1½ at 19½, Texas & Pacific 3¼ at 44¼, Denver & Rio Grande preferred 1⅜ at 9¾, St. Louis & San Francisco 1⅜ at 17½, Royal Dutch, old 2⅞ at 97⅜, new 2⅜ at 97¾, Industrial Alcohol 2 at 151, Marine preferred 1⅝ at 117⅝, and common 1⅜ at 83¼.

PUNTA ALEGRE A FEATURE.

The Boston market began quiet and with the general aspects of a half-holiday session. Prices were irregular at the opening, but the undertone was rather bullish, Punta Alegre was the feature of early trading. It advanced to 58, its highest record price, and a gain of more than three points since the previous day's closing. Trading house shares were lower, but there was no activity for this group. Telephone issues also declined. Edison continued weak. There was not much business in coppers. United Drug second preferred was a weak issue, declining two points to 118. Calumet and Hecla declined ten points on odd lot trading.

The local market, which closed at noon on account of the parade, was weak at the opening, but rallied in New York at that time. Among declines at the close here were Shattuck, 1¼ at 142¾, Swift International ⅜ at 69¼, Libby ¼ at 30¾, American Telephone 1¾ at 100½, New England Telephone ¼ at 91, Edison 1 at 157, Copper Range ⅜ at 42½, Booth ¾ at 22, and United Drug second preferred 2 at 118.

Among gains were American Bosch Magneto, 1⅞ at 70¾, its highest record price; Ventura Oil, ¼ at 19¾, and Stewart, ⅛ at 46.

War Orders Cancelled

The General Electric Co. is a corporation which has been subjected to large scale cancellation of war orders. A year ago its business was running at the rate of $250,000,000 per annum. Now the rate is about $155,000,000. Much of the work canceled was on turbines and gears for the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The U. S. Shipping Board has cancelled or suspended contracts for more than five hundred steel, wooden and concrete ships which were to have cost more than $500,000,000.

FOREIGN ORDER FOR STEEL PLACED

British Interests to Buy Thousands of Tons of American Rails

The steel trade was greatly interested in the statement that British interests had placed with an American producer an order for several thousand tons of semi-finished steel rails. This is said to be the first report order received by this company for months and is significant to producers in general as pointing the beginning of extensive foreign demand. All experts who have toured the war region since the armistice have reported that a large quantity of structural and other steel products will be needed in Europe for railroad and other reconstruction work, but a good deal will depend upon the ability of foreigners to arrange credits upon which they can buy.

It is said by the Iron Age that there has not been general recognition of the existence of an open market in steel products because there has been no sensational and widespread price cutting, but that without acting in concert producers have been limiting operations to business coming in. That this has been light is indicated by curtailment of working time or closing of plants. Independent companies are operating now as a rule at the rate of 60 per cent of capacity only. The United States Steel Corporation is on a 70 per cent. basis in Chicago and nearer 80 per cent. basis around Pittsburgh.

But according to a New York statement there is more rail and equipment buying by railroads. The carriers are in need of large amounts of steel supplies. It is a question how much longer they can refrain from placing large orders. It is believed the government will have to buy cars and locomotives before the time for moving crops.

Let's Go!

"Let's go!"

That summons is the slogan of the Yankee Division. It sums up the mighty spirit of the Twenty-Sixth. It was ever their call to duty. To New England at large the slogan now comes as an inspiration for the future.

"Let's go!" Truly one of those "Sabre-cuts of Saxon speech," of which Bret Harte wrote.

The Yankee Division was called to the World War. It was the first of our National Guard divisions to reach France. It was on active service for a longer period of time than any other division of the American Expeditionary Forces. The story of its fighting efficiency is told in the thousands, literally thousands, of decorations its officers and men received. Germany created the hideous term "shock troops." The Yankee Division met, withstood and hurled back the best German exemplars of that expression.

"Let's go!" How that phrase bites into the human consciousness! Commanders have exhorted their men in resounding bursts of fiery eloquence. The deeds of armies and of arms have been extolled in literature without end. Epic poems have been written about men who fought in causes of indifferent merit. But the spirit of all of these is embraced in a simple Saxon phrase.

"Let's go!" Their duty done, our soldiers impatiently awaited permission to return to their own country. They yearned for home and the joys of civilian life. But an admiring public would see them on parade ere they cast off the accoutrements of war. Today we see them in impressive array.

From our New England soldiers, as they swing past, we "home folks" may take over new inspiration for the years to come.

Our high pride in their deeds and our ecstatic joy in their return are voiced in our ringing cheers.

But, no matter what may befall, none of us may offer more than they risked, more than some of that division gave. In the war they went to their "objectives" and beyond.

In our everyday life may we do as much. Let us give thanks to the Yankee Division for writing New England's name so high upon the Nation's Roll of Honor.

Let us accept gratefully the guidance which is offered us in the Yankee Division slogan.

"Let's go!"

Buy Victory Bonds Now and Save the Profit

Copyright, 1919, Star Company

The Victory Loan started off like a whirlwind.

The reason is perfectly plain. When there is something for sale that eventually everybody will want, the wise men, the men trained in buying, are the first in the market buying to their capacity.

That explains why great blocks of the bonds are being bought by big banks, by millionaires, by men who make a study of investing money.

You know how when a popular play begins a run at a theatre the brokers buy tickets months in advance. They know that tomorrow or next week you will want to see that play and will be willing to pay a bonus, a profit, to them for the privilege.

The bankers know the same thing about these Victory Bonds.

They know that in a few weeks or a few months you will decide to invest your savings and that then they will be able to sell you at a profit the rock solid promises of Uncle Sam which you can buy today as cheaply as they can.

This last loan should be just as much a popular loan, a people's loan, as any that preceded it. It should be even more a popular loan, because it bears a higher rate of interest and so gives you a better return.

If you have got any money in your pocket put it all into Victory Bonds.

If you haven't any ready money, but have a salary, make arrangements at some bank to buy your bonds a little at a time, so much a week or so much a month. It will teach you to save money, one of the most valuable lessons you can learn.

Under any conditions buy as many bonds as you have ready money to pay for, and then bind yourself to buy as many more as you think you can possibly spare the money to pay for in the coming year.

It isn't a charity you are subscribing to. It's a business proposition of buying for yourself the best security ever offered at the lowest price it will ever be sold to you.

This is the boy who owns Boston and New England today. He is the Yankee Division hero, back from the Argonne and other jungles of death. He is the boy who was sent to smash the Boche. He delivered the goods. His "Y. D." insignia is a badge of courage second to none. He is good and brave and clean. He is a credit to his country and his mother. The town is his. Three cheers for him!

500,000 CATS CONSCRIPTED SERVED, THEN VANISHED!

By Robert Welles Ritchie
Universal Service Staff Correspondent

LONDON, April 21.—There's no D. S. O. for pussies in the British Army List, not yet a V. C. But hear now how an army of 500,000 unconsidered cats from London town helped do their bit for the Empire and democracy.

A little over two years ago an advertisement appeared in one of the London papers reading this way:

"Common cats wanted—any number. Deliver to Charles Harris's Bird Store, Bethnal Green Road."

Of course the common people who read the "ad" may have thought it strange for a bird store to be advertising for cats in any number; but whatever their private opinions, the cats were forthcoming. Mr. Harris of Bethnal Green Road rapidly began acquiring a collection of homeless tabbies and tommies, such as old London perhaps never had seen gathered in one place before. Anything that wore fur and a rebellious expression of countenance was acceptable to Mr. Harris.

A Mysterious Contract

For he was let into part of the secret, you know. He had an army contract for cats. Just plain cats! Even the long-suffering Mr. Harris, the bird man of Bethnal Green road, did not know what the cats were wanted for. No Englishman, much less a bird man of Bethnal Green, stops to inquire the reason why when government speaks. His only to do or die.

Perhaps Mr. Harris almost died before his contract for 500,000 cats was duly completed. Had he done so the sympathies of his neighbors would have been his unqualifiedly. As it was, every day or so a large army truck drew up before Mr. Harris's place of business and sundry very lively bags of merchandise were transferred from his store to the interior of the truck. With many muffled protests from the bags, it should be recorded in the interests of sober history.

Well, the cats went from Bethnal Green road direct to the British lines on the Western front, via Boulogne and Amiens. There they were distributed up and down the British lines.

Revenge Is Feline Instinct

Not because the British Tommy loved cats more, but that the cats loved gas less. It had been discovered by some sharp gas officer in the forces that long before the presence of the noxious chemicals in the air could be detected by mere man Old Moll had her back up and tail clubbed and was crying for revenge against the boche, even the sensitive canary bird, savior of many a biped in submarines, was no surer fire against gas than the despised pussy.

Therefore the British lines from Ypres to the Champagne gave homes to London's mobilized felines. As a by-product of their military service, the lady and gentlemen volunteers in fur kept down the rat population remarkably.

But what has become of these 500,000—and their inevitable sons and daughters of veterans—since the armistice? Alas! the War Office is silent on that score. Is it possible that a Franco-British cat entente already has been concluded, with privileges of French citizenship for the offspring of trench heroes—and heroines?

To Make Money Worthless
Fighting With Ideas
Studying Confucius
It Is All About Lenine

—By Arthur Brisbane—

MR. LENINE says he "deliberately intends" to make all money worthless. But money already IS worthless everywhere except for what it represents. Men have used skins of cattle, sea shells, rum, tobacco, horses, goats, women and latterly silver, gold and copper ALL AS MONEY. Mr. Lenine is destroying Russian rubles—nothing easier. But he won't destroy VALUE. Men will always invent something to represent value and call it money.

Go to Russia now with a piece of gold stamped five dollars or twenty francs and the Bolshevists will take it in exchange for anything.

Mr. Lenine says: "The frantic financial debauch in which all governments have indulged during the war" will make money worthless everywhere. He is mistaken. The debauch in this country, everything included, amounts to less than one-half a year's income of the United States.

No debauch here, just a quiet little celebration.

Lenine studies Confucius and his doctrines, which is appropriate. Many overlook the fact that Bolshevism breaks out in a nation of which only 2 per cent. of the population represents manufacturing labor.

Ninety-eight per cent. is heavy, dull, agricultural labor. It is an effort to rule the world by the discarded methods of the guilds of the Middle Ages and the New England town meeting.

Lenine says his scheme is to fight with "ideas," and this he says is a brand new thought. It is as old as the first man monkey that fastened a sharp stone on the end of a long stick and cracked his neighbor's skull with that IDEA.

All wars have been won by ideas, and nothing else. When Alexander the Great conquered the Persians by making their own elephants gallop over them that was an idea.

When Napoleon's enemies were fleeing Russia Napoleon made his artillery shoot at the ice, breaking it and sinking them all instead of shooting at the soldiers. That was an idea.

Caesar, besieging Alesia, built one trench between himself and the city and another outside trench between himself and the Gaul attacking him. That was one of the ideas that made Caesar.

Mr. Lenine believes that you can take a nation, stick its head, the thinking part, in the mud, let the feet stay up in the air to do the thinking, governing, planning and guiding. He will find that's a mistaken idea.

Confucius, whom he studies, could have told him so.

Confucius was talking of a woman who kept on living in a certain place, although her husband and son had been killed there by tigers. She would not move because the government was not oppressive. "Oppressive government," said Confucius, "is more cruel than a tiger."

Confucius also said: "He who exercises government by means of his virtue may be compared to the North Pole star, which keeps its place and all the other stars turn toward it."

It would surprise the Chinese gentleman, dead twenty-four hundred years ago, to learn that his doctrines were quoted in the Russian maelstrom.

Mr. Lenine talks about "capitalist lust, bourgeois financiers, international exploiters."

These are catch words drummed into him by his friend, Rosa Luxembourg, killed not long since, and learned by her from Karl Marx. They don't mean what the individual using them think they mean. Men are driven to accomplishments and to hard work by selfishness. The colored gentleman refused to run a short errand for 25 cents, giving as his reason, "I have 25 cents already."

Like Lenine, he did not possess "capitalist's lust," and he would not have built a city like Petrograd on a swamp or one of the factories that the Bolsheviks have seized. The selfishness which shocks and amuses Mr. Lenine represents the mainspring well wound up and put inside of human beings to keep them going. Break the mainspring, as the Slavonic-Mongolian-Tartaric, twentieth-century Confucius is trying to do, and you won't have much left.

Lenine mentions that he is calling in "foreign specialists" to help construct machinery to keep his population from starvation. You may be sure that Mr. Lenine isn't paying those foreign specialists "100 ruble notes that have no value." He is paying them real money and quietly overlooking their "capitalist lust."

Lenine represents dissatisfaction at the bottom that compels intelligence at the top to worry and improve. He is unnecessarily violent about it. But his work will be confined largely to his own country, and when they get tired of it they can stop and take the old road, less exciting but safer.
